One of the UK's leading marine management and engineering solutions companies, Offshore Marine Management (OMM), has moved to new larger headquarters following a period of exceptional growth over the past 12 months.

Despite the economic climate, OMM has continued to grow during the last year as it has improved its national and international market position in the offshore renewable energy, telecommunications, and oil and gas industries.

To cater for the growth and allow for further development, the OMM headquarters has moved to offices in Colston Tower in Bristol City Centre. The offices will give OMM the space to increase its current 25-strong team over the coming period.

As well as its headquarters in Bristol, OMM has an operational office in Cambridge and international bases in Germany and Singapore. The company is planning to open further offices in the USA and Middle East later this year.

OMM Managing Director Rob Grimmond, said: "Our role in the offshore market has seen exceptional growth thanks to the experience, quality and skills of our staff, management team and supporting network. The new headquarters will give us an even better working environment and give us a platform for continued growth and success in 2010 and beyond."

There will be an official opening event for the new offices on Friday, April 9.
